WEATHER

Miss winter? It's back
Snow and cold may result in slick roads

Sun staff report

A wintry blast is expected to leave up to 2 inches of snow today, according to the National Weather Service.

Clark County was included in a NWS-issued winter weather advisory Friday, which said weather system passing through the Ohio Valley could result in hazardous road conditions.

Most of the snow was expected to diminish by this morning, but the advisory was scheduled to remain in effect until noon. The low today is expected to be about 14 degrees.

District 7 Kentucky Transportation Cabinet (KYTC) road crews spent much of Friday anti-icing bridges and overpasses, according to a news release from the department. Trucks were loaded with equipment readied for snow and ice removal. Weather conditions are being monitored closely by the District 7 Office in Lexington.

A two-shift crew will be utilized for the roads to be patrolled and treated continuously this afternoon, overnight and through tomorrow morning. Contractor trucks will be supplementing the highway maintenance crews, the news release states.

District 7 personnel have the responsibility for roadways in Clark, Anderson, Bourbon, Boyle, Fayette, Garrard, Jessamine, Madison, Mercer, Montgomery, Scott and Woodford counties.

The Kentucky SAFE Patrol — Safety Assistance for Freeway Emergencies — operates seven days a week on Kentucky interstates and parkways. SAFE Patrol drivers are equipped with blankets, shovels, reflective cones, auto fluids and other equipment to assist stranded motorists. The SAFE Patrol can be contacted at (877) 367-5982.

Congressional redistricting approved

FRANKFORT (AP) —

Lawmakers approved a congressional redistricting plan for Kentucky on Friday, a day after an attorney went to court to ask a judge to take over the issue.

The House voted 58-26 for the plan, two hours after the Senate passed it 29-7. The heavily debated measure, which also reopens the congressional filing deadline for five days, now goes to Gov. Steve Beshear who is expected to sign it into law.

Despite protests from the GOP, the plan bolsters the Democrats' hold on the 6th Congressional District represented by Democratic U.S. Rep. Ben Chandler.

State Sen. Alice Forgy Kerr, R-Lexington, called the proposal the "Ben Chandler Lifetime Employment Act."

"We're making this a completely Democratic district," Kerr said.

The plan also could help incumbent Republican congressmen, including U.S. Rep. Hal Rogers. He would keep some key counties that he wanted in the 5th District that he has represented for more than 30 years.

Child's death ruled homicide

LEXINGTON (AP) — The

Fayette County coroner's office says a 5-year-old Lexington boy's death two months ago was the result of ingesting vinegar and that the death is being investigated as a homicide.

The coroner's office said in a news release Friday that Joseph Maoping Adams died Dec. 3 at University of Kentucky Medical Center in the pediatric emergency department. An autopsy was performed in Frankfort the next day.

The release said the boy was taken to the hospital by emergency medical services after becoming unresponsive at home.

Lexington Police Department spokeswoman Sherelle

Roberts said the boy had an existing medical condition but said only medical professionals could determine whether there was any link to his death.

Roberts said police have been investigating the death since it occurred.

State reports increased revenues for January

FRANKFORT (AP) — Kentucky started the year with a welcome bump in state revenue, but not nearly the boost the state needed to offset planned spending cuts.

Budget Director Mary Lassiter released figures Friday showing General Fund receipts topped $800 million last month, some $60 million more than January 2011. That's an increase of more than 8 percent.

Road Fund revenue also edged upward by nearly $118 million in January, a 10 percent increase over January 2011.

Lassiter said sales tax receipts rose 6.7 percent but were offset by a 6.5 percent decline in individual income tax receipts.

"Property tax collections, on the other hand, were up $53.1 million in January compared to last year," Lassiter said. "We caught up in January as property tax receipts were down 9.6 percent for the first six months of the year."

love you both day and night, never forget to kiss me good-night...cuddle with care and I will always be there ... Love: Briana, Landen and John."

"For our family, everything we do, we want it to be to God's glory. The kids are really excited to be used by God as an outreach ministry to people," Tony Stout said. "Many of the places we're taking the bears, the kids don't have a lot, so if they can see that bear and see that verse and they can get some motivation, that would be exciting. If we give out a thousand bears and just one person comes to know Christ as their Savior, it's all been worth it."

In the past three weeks, the children have taken bears to the UK hospital, the Clark County Homeless Shelter, for children with disabilities from all over the world, and Daphne Stout said the visit last week was a real eye-opener for the children.

"They were a little nervous when they first got there and saw some of the children with severe disabilities, but once they warmed up they really enjoyed it," Daphne Stout said. "When we left, Briana said she wanted to go back when she turned 18 and become a volunteer. Landen looked at me and said, 'I'm glad Jesus made me like I am, and I'm glad Jesus gave me a mommy.'

"I wanted them to realize that we are all made different in God's eyes. We all have different stories, but we can all be together as one and just because you have a disability or are different doesn't mean we can't help each other. And I think the trip to Liberty did that. They wanted to know when we could go back."

The children have received donations from people at their church, Calvary Christian, from others locally and from friends in Georgia as well as from their classmates at Shearer Elementary School.

Briana said their classmates were excited to help with the project.

"Our classes helped out a lot with the bears. When we told them what we were doing they were real excited," she said.

The family currently has drop-off boxes for bears, and any other stuffed animal anyone wants to donate, at Calvary Christian Church and Shearer Elementary School.

For more information about donating bears, contact Daphne Stout at (859) 940-8172 or 737-1994.

The kids have collected more than 250 bears already, but would love to have many more.

"We're going to keep collecting bears and delivering them as long as we can keep getting them. If anybody wants to donate bears, we'll take as many as we can get," Landen said.

the students said they made the trip just to get a chance to speak to state Sen. R.J. Palmer, D-28, and state Rep. Donna Mayfield, R-73, and to get answers to questions concerning BCTC and their education.

With continued tuition increases on the minds of students everywhere, it was no surprise that the first question directed to Palmer by student Denny Esteppe was whether upcoming budget cuts to higher education meant another tuition hike.

Palmer said that while the general assembly didn't set tuition, it did have an impact on it because the general assembly set support spending.

"I would anticipate that there is going to be a reduction in everything, including higher education," Palmer said. "Now what that translates to, as far as your increase in tuition, I don't know, and don't have any control over that."

Palmer said he felt like the state was at a "critical stage" where continued cuts were making higher education unattainable for some Kentuckians, and he hoped that a solution to the problem could be found soon.

"We've cut spending nine times in the last three years to the tune of about $1 billion dollars, so we are living within our means," Palmer said. "The problem is we don't have a tax structure that is elastic and progressive enough to grow to keep up with the needs we have."

"We are getting to a critical point where we're making it more challenging for people to access higher education, and I think that is counter-intuitive to what we want to be doing. Fixing this is being discussed, and has been discussed for a long time. I'm hopeful that we are sincere about it this time."

Tuition wasn't the only thing on the students' minds though. Freshman Sandra Grimes asked Palmer about the state's efforts to govern for-profit schools, and shared her experience dealing with National College.

Grimes said she received an associates degree from National College, but when she tried to enroll at Eastern Kentucky University last year to get her bachelor's degree, she was told that none of her classes would transfer.

State Rep. Donna Mayfield, R-73, left, talks with a group of students from the Bluegrass Community and Technical College Winchester campus Thursday during its visit to the Capitol in Frankfort. BCTC President Augusta Julian and school officials JoEllen Reed and Bruce Manley look on.

Grimes said students attending National College were never told before enrolling that the classes would not transfer, so she was shocked when she couldn't enroll at EKU.

Legislators were working on getting for-profit schools under the oversight of the Council on Higher Education with legislation approved last year, Palmer said, but they were still trying to close several loopholes in that legislation.

"We addressed that issue last year and I think we made some progress. Is it perfect? No. But I think we have made some progress and we want to make things more uniform and I think it is a step in the right direction," Palmer said.

Grimes also had an opportunity to speak at length with BCTC President Augusta Julian, who met the students at the Capitol, and said she appreciated her concern.

"I've been really frustrated because I felt like National College was too big to take on. I appreciate Dr. Julian for listening to me," Grimes said. "When I found out that nothing would transfer, and I would have to start over, I was really disappointed. I'm 44 years old and I don't have a lot of time for do-overs, and it is expensive to have to pay for the same classes twice."

Both Palmer and Mayfield praised the BCTC Winchester campus and the classes and opportunities it is providing for not only Clark County students, but those in surrounding counties as well.

Mayfield also answered student questions concerning proposed legislation she co-sponsored concerning drug testing for welfare recipients, and said it would help stop abuse of the system by some.

"I am the first person to give someone help when they need it. That's how I was brought up and that's what I believe in," Mayfield said. "I think people are tired of seeing tax dollars going directions that we don't benefit from. Without sounding unsympathetic, I know that people need help, but a lot of people are taking advantage of that money — money that can help other people who really need it."

Mayfield's daughter is a BCTC student at the Winchester campus. She said it was nice to have a facility at home that was much less expensive than the larger regional schools, provided the same quality educational opportunities and prepared students for transferring to other schools to finish their four-year degrees.

This was the third year that BCTC has sponsored trips for students from its different campuses to go to Frankfort and meet with legislators.

Obama: Birth control policy meets everyone's needs

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama declared Friday he's found a solution to a birth-control uproar that will protect religious liberty but also ensure that women have access to free contraception, as he rushed to defuse an election-year issue that threatened to overtake his administration.

Capping weeks of growing controversy, Obama announced he was backing off a newly announced requirement for religious employers to provide free birth control coverage even if it runs counter to their religious beliefs. Instead, workers at such institutions will be able to get free contraception directly from health insurance companies.

"Religious liberty will be protected and a law that requires free preventative care will not discriminate against women," Obama said in an appearance in the White House briefing room.

"I understand some folks in Washington want to treat this as another political wedge issue. But it shouldn't be. I certainly never saw it that way," Obama said. "This is an issue where people of good will on both sides of the debate have been sorting through some very complicated questions."

Obama's abrupt shift was an attempt to satisfy both sides of a deeply sensitive debate, and most urgently, to end a mounting political nightmare for the White House.

Although the administration had originally given itself more than year to work out the details of the new birth control coverage requirement for religious employers, the president acknowledged that the situation had become untenable and demanded a swift solution.

Congressional Republicans as well as GOP presidential hopefuls were beating up on Obama relentlessly over the issue, and even Democrats and liberal groups allied with the Roman Catholic church were defecting.

"After the many genuine concerns that have been raised over the last few weeks, as well as frankly the more cynical desire on the part of some to make this into a political football, it became clear that spending months hammering out a solution was not going to be an option. That we needed to move this faster," Obama said. He said that he directed the Department of Health and Human Services last week to speed up the process from a matter of months to days.

Sen. Marco Rubio, R-Fla., center, accompanied by Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, right, and Sen. Kelly Ayotte, R-N.H. gestures during a news conference on Capitol Hill in Washington Wednesday to criticize President Barack Obama for insisting that employers must provide health insurance that includes birth control for women.

Women will still get guaranteed access to birth control without co-pays or premiums no matter where they work, a provision of Obama's health care law that he insisted must remain. But religious universities and hospitals that see contraception as an unconscionable violation of their faith can refuse to cover it, and insurance companies will then have to step in to do so.

The leader of a Catholic organization and a prominent women's group both expressed initial support for the changes.

"The framework developed has responded to the issues we identified that needed to be fixed," Sister Carol Keehan, president of the Catholic Health Association, a trade group representing Catholic hospitals that had fought against the birth control requirement, said in a statement.

Planned Parenthood also backed the revisions, saying the Obama administration was still committed to ensuring all women have access to birth control coverage, no matter where they work.

"We believe the compliance mechanism does not compromise a woman's ability to access these critical birth control benefits," Cecile Richards, the women's group president, said.

By keeping free contraception for employers at religious workplaces — but providing a different way to do it — Obama was able to assert he gave no ground on the basic principle of full preventative care that matters most to Obama.

Yet, it also was clear that the president felt he had no choice but to retreat on a three-week-old policy in the face of a fierce political furor that showed no signs of cooling.

Officials said Obama has the legal authority to order insurance companies to provide free contraception coverage directly to workers. He will demand it in a new rule.

Following an intense White House debate that led to the original policy, officials said Obama seriously weighed the concerns over religious liberty, leading to the revamped decision.

Before announcing the revamped policy at the White House, Obama called Keehan, Richards and Archbishop Timothy Dolan, president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

But the change just led to more criticism from some of Obama's opponents. Texas Republican Rep. Kevin Brady said the revamped rule marked a "full scale retreat by a disconnected president who now knows that Washington shouldn't force Americans to abandon their religious convictions."

It was just on Jan. 20 that the Obama administration announced that religious-affiliated employers — outside of churches and houses of worship — had to cover birth control free of charge as preventative care for women. These hospitals, schools and charities were given an extra year to comply, until August 2013, but that concession failed to satisfy opponents, who responded with outrage.

Louisville church to begin broadcasting its Sunday services

LOUISVILLE (AP) — Southeast Christian Church in Louisville has grown into one of the nation's largest churches, with average attendance this year at 22,500. But its audience may grow even bigger with televised broadcasts on Sunday mornings.

Senior minister Dave Stone told The Courier-Journal it's an idea that's been considered over the years, but leaders never felt it was the right time. Now they hope television will draw people to the church.

Stone says the church sees the telecasts as "a good first step for the person who is skeptical of Christianity or of Southeast."

A survey last year by Outreach magazine and Life-Way Research found Southeast was fifth largest in the U.S. in terms of average weekend attendance and the fifth fastest-growing church.

The program will begin Sunday on WAVE-TV.

Police say Jerusalem monastery desecrated

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli police say "death to Christians" and other Hebrew-language graffiti has been scrawled on a Greek Orthodox monastery in Jerusalem.

Police spokesman Micky Rosenfeld said on Tuesday that "price tag" was also painted on the monastery in the Valley of the Cross, near Israel's parliament.

The phrase "price tag" refers to retaliation by suspected Jewish extremists for Israeli government actions against settlers.

Such acts originally targeted West Bank mosques but have recently expanded to include a mosque inside Israel, Israeli military bases, and now, a Christian holy site.

Army Radio reported that "Maccabees of Migron" was painted on the monastery, too. Maccabees were ancient Jewish heroes, and Migron is an unauthorized settlement facing a court-ordered evacuation.

Fearful, Iraq's Sunnis leaving mixed neighborhoods

BAGHDAD (AP) — The question was disturbing: Why do you live here?

Ahmed al-Azami, a Sunni Muslim, has owned a house in Baghdad's Shiite neighborhood of Shaab since 1999. But when Shiite residents recently began questioning why he, a Sunni, was living among them, he decided it was time to leave.

His story and similar tales by other Sunnis suggest Iraqis are again segregating themselves along sectarian lines, prompted by a political crisis pulling at the explosive Sunni-Shiite divide just weeks after the American withdrawal left Iraq to chart its own future.

The numbers so far are small and not easy to track with precision, but anecdotal accounts and a rise in business at real estate agencies in Sunni neighborhoods reveal a Sunni community contemplating the worse-case scenario and acting before it's too late.

Bağdad and the rest of Iraq are already highly segregated places. Running from bombs, death squads and their own neighbors at the height of violence in 2006 and 2007, Sunnis and Shiites fled neighborhoods that were once mixed.

That violence and the resulting migrations slowed in 2008, but tensions are again swirling as a power struggle worsens between Shiite Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki and Sunni politicians who have been largely sidelined since the overthrow of Saddam Hussein. And many fear increased violence could result.

"People started to question my origins. Why don't you live in Azamiyah?" said al-Azami, referring to the Sunni-dominated enclave in northern Baghdad where he has a shop. He felt so nervous and unwelcome that he began looking for a house in Azamiyah a few weeks ago. Once he moves, he'll either rent out or sell his Shaab house.

"I will always be a stranger to them," he said, referring to his Shiite neighbors.

In a sign that he is not alone, rental prices in Azamiyah have risen by about $200 a month, said real estate agent Abu Abdullah al-Obeidi. Other Sunni neighborhoods of the capital like Adel and Khadra have also seen rent increases, he said.

"The people who are coming to Azamiyah to rent or buy are afraid that they will be killed during any possible sectarian war if they stay in the mixed areas," al-Obeidi said.

Iraq's worst political crisis in years blew up just as the last American troops were rolling across the border into Kuwait on Dec. 18. Al-Maliki's government issued an arrest warrant for the country's highest-ranking Sunni politician, Vice President Tariq al-Hashemi, on charges he ran a hit squad that assassinated government officials five years ago.

When in doubt, ask those with ideas

I realized the other day why planning my wedding has been relatively easy — because other people have done most of it for me.

Please understand, that is far from a complaint. I know some brides feel like friends and relatives, mothers in particular, try to take over and ignore the bride's wishes. That is not what I'm saying here. I'm saying that, for all my previous bridesmaid experiences, I really didn't have much of a vision for my own wedding, and even less of a clue about how to make the few things I do want a reality.

I love my mom, but she probably knows less than I do. I remember the first meeting we had with a caterer, one we eventually chose not to hire. I believe the word "amateur," pronounced "ama-toor," was used fairly liberally. You wouldn't want to have an "ama-toor" cut the cake, heaven forbid! Yes, that was always my worst fear, that I would find myself at my wedding without a single person qualified to cut the cake.

At that pronouncement, my mom said, "I think I must be a little green at this wedding stuff."

Thankfully, we later learned that is perfectly acceptable to, in fact, leave the cake cutting to "ama-toors," although my mom has continued to talk about how "green" she is with subsequent caterers and florists. I can almost see her thoughts, "I didn't know about the cake cutting, about the 'ama-toors."

It seems people expect the bride and her mother to have opinions on things. Oh, how I wish we had opinions on things. My hair? Definitely down, or up. The flowers? I suggested pink. That's why we had to bring in help.

I've been meeting with my friend Rhonda to get details ironed out, and it has been great because she knows what you are supposed to do. The same thing with my friend Fara, who will be helping with the church decorations. They have ideas. I'm a writer, I'm supposed to be creative, but I have no ideas. You have no idea what it's like to be an "ama-toor." Or maybe you do, and you can sympathize with my plight.

And my poor future mother-in-law, Dinah, and all the emails I send.

Since Brandon's sister is married, I think of his mother as the wedding expert. She planned Megan's wedding and, although I wasn't there, by all accounts it was a beautiful event, so I usually feel better if I run my choices by her. Even my mom says, "Maybe we should ask Dinah about that."

Rachel Parsons

For some reason, I could not make up my mind about the invitations, but when I looked through the sample books with Rhonda, it all seemed so clear. They absolutely had to have silver lined envelopes. Having someone around to validate my choices, or at least help me eliminate some choices, made all the difference.

When Fara offered to help decorate the church, she asked me what my ideas were. I just stared at her blankly. Ideas? What are ideas? I'm an "ama-toor," remember? I'm excited to see all her ideas coming together, and I'm trying to figure out how people learn to do stuff. I've been to weddings (plenty of them), but I have discovered that I know exactly nothing.

Brandon seems to have even fewer opinions than I do, which I'm told is standard groom behavior. He is still mourning the fact that we aren't going to elope, so I usually don't bother him with the details. The silver lined invitation envelopes don't seem to excite him in quite the same way they do me.

My friend Lisa emailed me the other day to say she was ordering shower invitations and she wanted to know where we were registered. Whoops. I quickly thought of some stores that sounded like good places for a wedding registry and she had them printed on the invitations, even though I am not actually registered there yet. I promise I will be before the shower and, if not, well, we will just eat cake and forget about the whole present thing. I can honestly say I have yet to find a situation that is not improved by cake. My mom and I used to go to the grocery store bakery when I was growing up so often, we started having fake "Happy birthdays" written on our cakes because we were embarrassed for people to know we were eating them ourselves.

Which brings me back to my original point (you knew there had to be one, didn't you?) — it's a good thing I have plenty of people willing to help with this wedding, or else I might not have gotten anything done. I'm an "ama-toor," my mother's green — what's a girl to do? When she is lucky enough to have people who know what they're doing, she calls them. Believe me, it's the best way to go.

Ky. native chasing his Olympic dream

By Brian Blair
The News-Herald

Most people do what they can to avoid driving in icy conditions. When they are caught on slick roads they typically don't travel at high speeds in vehicles without brakes.

For one Owen County resident he has spent the winter doing quite the opposite.

Adam Clark graduated from Owen County High School in 2003. While in high school, he was an outstanding football player and track star.

In the summer of 2010, his college roommate encouraged him to send an application to something different than anything he had done before.

Clark took the advice and went on the USA Bobsled website and submitted an application. It was accepted and before he knew it Clark was in Lake Placid, N.Y., at the Olympic Training Center pushing bobsleds.

After going through the rookie camp for about a week, Clark took his first trip down the ice.

"My first trip in a bobsled blew me away," Clark said.

As the sled went faster and faster with each curve, Clark said he almost passed out.

Before losing consciousness, something else happened.

Adam Clark

"We crashed, rolled over and slid upside down all the way to the bottom," Clark said

During the week, Clark impressed the coaches enough that he was asked back to take part in team tryouts at the championships in September of 2011.

He performed well enough that the coaches asked him to push, meaning to help launch, for the USA-3 four-man team.

As the season progressed, Clark was able to move up to push for USA-2 and for the last couple of months he and his teammates have been in Europe competing.

Clark is the son of Mike Clark and Jane Barber. His father still lives on the family farm near Monterey and his mother lives outside Frankfort.

Some want to leave altered Vt. state police decals in place

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — Remember the pig hidden within the decal on the doors of some Vermont State Police cruisers?

There's now a movement under way to keep it there.

But it turns out there was more wrong with that image than just the white pig hidden as a splotch on the cow, made to resemble one of Vermont's ubiquitous Holsteins. State law requires that the cow in the crest be red — not red and white — as a tribute to the hardy Devon cattle first brought to Vermont by English settlers.

"What I would really like is for the governor to just leave the pigs on the car. That's the bottom line, at no expense to anybody," said Barre musician Cid Sinclair, who created the Facebook page "Save the Vermont Pigs." The site has been liked by more than 500 people. Two hundred people have signed an online petition, he said.

"No harm, no foul, take it as an opportunity to have some fun," Sinclair said. "We live in pretty bleak times and it's pretty rough. We have an opportunity to laugh together as one, as Vermonters."

The pigs in the 16-inch decal were first noticed last week by a state police trooper who was washing his car. The crest is believed to have been altered by a Vermont prison inmate.

February is National Pet Dental Awareness Month

It's that time of year again. It's February, which happens to be National Pet Dental Awareness Month.

The American Veterinary Medical Association established this month as National Pet Dental Month each year. This is so that emphasis can be placed on an area of pet care that is often overlooked by pet owners. Most pet owners are unaware of their pet's dental problems because most pets show few signs of dental disease.

However, dental disease is the most common disease in dogs and cats. More than 68 percent of all pets over the age of 3 have some form of periodontal or dental disease. Often, your pet's bad breath is the only obvious symptom of dental disease. Most every pet owner has experienced their dog or cat breathing that horrible stench directly into their face. The bad breath comes from tartar buildup which

Periodontal disease is inflammation or infection of the tissues surrounding the tooth. Tartar accumulates on the teeth contributing to gum recession around the base of the tooth. Gum recession leads to unprotected tooth surfaces and then infection. If the infection goes untreated, tooth loss is likely.

The thin, invisible buildup of bacteria on teeth is called plaque. If the plaque thickens it becomes mineralized and hard which is visible tartar. The tartar irritates the gums causing inflammation and infection called gingivitis.

Consequently, the oral infection can lead to other infections in the body. Tonsillitis is only one common type of secondary infection due to bad teeth. The bacteria causing the oral infection can actually get into the blood stream leading to liver, kidney, and even heart valve infections known as endocarditis.

Once your pet develops tartar, it will be necessary to have it removed by professional scaling and polishing under anesthesia. Most of the time, antibiotics are necessary after the dental cleaning to combat the bacteria that are responsible for the gingivitis. Tooth scaling would be performed with ultrasonic cleaning equipment to remove the tartar both above and below the gum line. The tartar beneath the gum line causes the most significant gum recession.

The teeth are then polished to help prevent further plaque buildup. Sometimes additional procedures such as extracting a tooth need to be performed at the same time. It is impossible to determine the full extent of dental disease until the pet is under anesthesia. Plaque can begin to form in as little as six hours after your pet's dental cleaning.

Therefore, it is imperative to establish a home dental care program for your pet. There are many different things that pet owners can do to help keep their pet's teeth healthy. Brushing your dog's teeth is unquestionably the best preventative step. Not all dogs will allow their owners to do this unless you get them used to it at a very early age. Brushing your pet's teeth every day is recommended.

Feeding dry food and crunchy treats actually helps scrape the plaque off their teeth as they are chewing. Prescription treats are available that have plaque fighting medicine in them making prevention much easier. Also, several special pet mouth rinses can be used to help prevent plaque.

As always, your veterinarian should advise you on the health of your pet's teeth. So, why not use National Pet Dental Awareness as a reminder to have your pet's teeth examined this month. Many veterinary practices offer specials or discounts during February.

Therefore, if you have any concerns about your pet's dental health, contact your veterinarian as soon as possible to help ensure your pet lives a long, healthy and happy life.

Family rescued after sailboat capsizes in rough seas

HONOLULU (AP) — Three family members attempting their first voyage across the Pacific in a sailboat were left adrift in rough seas hundreds of miles from land when their mast broke in high winds.

Just when they thought they were being rescued, seven hours later, the swell from the arriving cargo ship capsized the smaller vessel, tossing the trio into the cold water.

As the sailboat was destroyed, 9-year-old West James prepared for the worst, "We're gonna sink. We're gonna die," the boy said, according to his father.

Brad James, 32, said Thursday he tried to keep his son calm as they were in the Pacific for about two hours.

The father and son, along with Brad's younger brother Mitch James, hit a series of storms while sailing from Mexico to Hawaii and on Tuesday high winds snapped their mast and choppy water overheated their engine about 300 miles from their destination. The trio tried to work up a makeshift sail — but it blew away.

Family sues after casket was dropped

FRANKFORT (AP) — A Frankfort family is suing a cemetery that they say dropped the dearly departed during the burial.

The family of 85-year-old Katherine Galbraith wants damages from Sunset Memorial Gardens for their handling of the remains during the transportation and burial on March 24.

Family attorney Chris Haden told The State Journal that cemetery workers dropped the casket as they were lowering into the ground, causing the body to fall out. Haden says personal items, including a rose and pearl necklace, fell into the grave after the lid fell off the casket and Galbraith's body fell head first onto the ground.

"We believe they tried to lower the casket into the grave with a backhoe instead of a lowering mechanism, and that is when the casket fell off and broke open," Haden said.

Galbraith's daughter, Ruth Ritter of Frankfort, said the cemetery called after the accident and said the casket had been scratched, but didn't disclose that the body had fallen out.

The cemetery later disinterred Galbraith's remains, Haden said, and the family saw the full extent of the damage to the body and casket.

Haden says family members found mud and abrasions on the body. Ritter said the condition of the remains and casket horrified her.

"My mother was the most meticulous person," Ritter said. "Even at the hospital (during her last few months of life) she wore lipstick and earrings every day."

The cemetery reburied Galbraith two days later.

The funeral home denies any wrongdoing.

Ky. inmate beats odds, gets trial over eye injury

By Brett Barroquere
The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE — Johnny Davis thought the cataract surgery he had in 2005 would solve problems with his left eye. Instead, complications after the procedure only made life worse for the 57-year-old serving life in federal prison.

Three years later, with the pain and problems lingering, Davis, acting without an attorney, sued the U.S. Bureau of Prisons over his treatment while housed at United States Penitentiary-Big Sandy in Inez. Davis kept the suit alive and beat the odds to get a chance to argue his case before a jury on May 7 in Lexington. U.S. District Judge Amul R. Thapar granted him the trial date in a ruling Thursday.

The case is unusual, both because Davis pursued it for the first three years without the assistance of an attorney and because he'll get a trial, unless a settlement is reached.

"These cases rarely make it to juries," said Simon Sandoval-Moshenberg, an attorney with the Legal Aide Justice Center in Falls Church, Va., who is not involved in the case. "There are so many ways ... jails get them thrown out. It's very rare it'll actually go to a jury."

Davis' current attorney, MacKenzie Mayes Walter, who joined the lawsuit in September, said she looks forward to establishing that prison officials were responsible for Davis' "serious injuries."

Davis, convicted of federal drug charges in South Carolina, is currently being held at a federal prison in Williamsburg, S.C., and could not be reached for comment. The U.S. Justice Department, which represents the Bureau of Prisons, routinely declines to comment on pending litigation.

In court filings, the Bureau of Prisons denied any wrongdoing or negligence in the case.

Student health exams to add body mass index

LOUISVILLE (AP) — Public school health screenings in Kentucky are changing with the times.

In a nod to the growing problem of childhood obesity, the state Board of Education recently approved a proposal that would require schools to calculate and record a child's body mass index, which relates to body fat. At the same time, the proposal also eliminates a decades-long practice of checking middle-school students for signs of the spine condition scoliosis.

"Yes (body mass index) should be in their health record," said Alison Connell, an Eastern Kentucky University associate nursing professor and former nurse practitioner. "Probably, for this next generation, obesity will be the leading cause of death."

The American Academy of Pediatrics calls childhood obesity an "epidemic," and recommends body mass index screening to help with "early identification of excessive weight gain," according to its website. The calculations are based on height and weight.

Kentucky ranked third in the number of children ages 10 to 17 considered obese at 21 percent in a 2010 study by the non-profit public advocacy group Trust for America's Health and the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. Mississippi was first, at almost 22 percent, and Georgia second at 21.3 percent.

The Trust said that as of 2011, 21 states were calculating BMI in schools, up from just four states in 2005.

"We know that childhood obesity can lead to various additional health risks, such as Type 2 diabetes, high blood pressure, coronary heart disease" and others, said Dr. Amber Pendleton, a pediatrician at University of Louisville Pediatrics.

Pendleton said early intervention is "crucial in prevention of these complications."

The effectiveness of scoliosis screenings in schools has been under question for several years.

The screenings have been conducted in Kentucky public schools for at least 20 years, said Lisa Gross, spokeswoman for the state Department of Education.

But Gross noted the effectiveness of the screenings has been called into question by both the AAP and the United States Preventative Services Task Force, a federal agency that does research on health care effectiveness.

The task force recommended against routine screening for scoliosis in 2004; four years later, the AAP, the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons, the Scoliosis Research Society and the Pediatric Orthopaedic Society of North America joined to urge further research into the practice, saying they "do not support any formal recommendations against scoliosis screenings, given the available literature."

Scoliosis, a condition in which the spine develops a curve, can require surgery if left untreated. Screenings can catch the condition at an early stage, said Dr. B. Stephens Richards, a Dallas orthopaedic surgeon who is president of the Scoliosis Research Society.

A study is under way in both the U.S. and Canada that doctors hope will provide answers to whether treating scoliosis with a brace is effective, said Dr. Richard M. Schwend, a pediatric orthopaedic surgeon in Kansas City, Mo., and chairman of the AAP's section on orthopaedics.

Four indicted in Madison homicide

RICHMOND (AP) — Four people have been charged in Madison County with murder and attempted murder stemming from the shooting death in November.

A grand jury on Wednesday charged 27-year-old Matthew Denholm and 30-year-old Ryan Denholm with capital murder, criminal attempt to commit murder and first-degree burglary. Grand jurors also charged 31-year-old Sherry Lynn Bratten and 18-year-old Randall J. Burgess with facilitation of murder, facilitation of criminal attempt to commit murder and facilitation of first-degree burglary.

Police told the Richmond Register that Matthew Den-holm shot and killed Zachary Dustin Flower and injured his roommate, Kevin Price, in Berea on Nov. 21, the morning after they tried to break up a fight between Denholm and a group of men.

College Hoops

Today

Louisville at West Virginia

Louisville takes a five-game winning streak into Morgantown to face a West Virginia team that has struggled of late. The Mountaineers will need another big game from Kevin Jones.

Connecticut at Syracuse

These were supposed to be the two best teams in the Big East. Syracuse has lived up to the hype, but Connecticut has been one of the nation's most disappointing teams.

Virginia at North Carolina

The Cavaliers are much-improved, but Tony Bennett's club lacks the offensive firepower to keep pace with the Tar Heels in Chapel Hill.

Miami (Fla.) at Florida State

It's a battle between two ACC teams that have won at Duke this season. Florida State cannot afford to lose at home if it plans on staying in the league title chase.

Baylor at Missouri

Missouri out-toughed Baylor in a win in Waco last month. The Bears have to the talent to return the favor, but will Scott Drew's team show enough fight?

Kansas State at Texas

Kansas State's NCAA Tournament résumé is solid, but a win in Austin wouldn't hurt. The Wildcats are 2-3 on the road in league play. Texas, currently 5-6, needs to get to .500 in the Big 12.

Cincinnati at Marquette

Cincinnati's once-solid profile is in need of some quality wins. Marquette hit a speed bump in South Bend, but the Golden Eagles have emerged as one of the top teams in the league.

Tennessee at Florida

Tennessee knocked off Florida in Knoxville — without Jarnell Stokes in the lineup — but the Vols have struggled on the road in league play.

Maryland at Duke

The Blue Devils have lost two straight ACC games at home — and neither team was named North Carolina. Duke will need another big game from Mason Plumlee, who scored 23 points vs. the Terps in College Park.

Michigan State at Ohio State

The Buckeyes are the clear favorites in the Big Ten, but the Spartans are lurking. Tom Izzo's club must find a way to limit Jared Sullinger's touches around the basket.

Alabama at LSU

Alabama must forge ahead without talented forward Tony Mitchell (indefinite suspension). LSU has been a tough out in Baton Rouge, but this is a game that Alabama needs to win.

Humphrey, Cards fall at Simon Kenton

By Keith Taylor
The Winchester Sun

It wasn't a good homecoming for George Rogers Clark coach Scott Humphrey.

Humphrey, coach at Simon Kenton before taking over the Cardinals nine years ago, watched in disappointment as his former team, led by ex-assistant Trent Steiner, dealt the Cardinals a 71-60 setback Friday night in Independence.

"They played outstanding," Humphrey said. "They played great. We scouted them several times and with them, it comes down to hitting shots, and when they do, it's contagious and they spread you. I'm going to give them a ton of credit. I think they played great. They had a great crowd and they fed off it."

"Sometimes you need a punch in the nose or a kick in the tail and we got one tonight. There were so many loose balls we didn't get. I won't fault our effort, it's just that the ball didn't bounce our way sometimes."

Clark (23-5), returning from a five-day break, led by three twice in the first five minutes, but Simon Kenton grabbed the lead and never trailed the remainder of the game. The Pioneers led by 19 points early in the fourth frame, while Clark failed to get within single digits after falling behind by double figures in the third quarter.

"I felt like our kids competed, and late in the game, we made a nice little run, but I thought this was one of the first times all year to where (the other team was more physical than we were). They were real physical in

In the lane

George Rogers Clark senior Kelsie Parido goes up for a shot in the Lady Cardinals' win over Henry Clay last month. Clark (14-10) hasn't played since a 45-36 loss at Tates Creek earlier this week. The Lady Cardinals return to action tonight at Norton Gymnasium against Pendleton County. Seniors Parido and Tayloir Rose will be honored before the game set for 7 p.m. Clark is at Deming Monday and concludes the regular season against West Jessamine Friday night at Norton Gymnasium.

Tar Heels 'more determined'

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's Kendall Marshall spent the hours after the shocking loss to rival Duke reliving the little plays — a missed free throw here, a just-out-of-reach rebound there — that all became bigger once Austin Rivers' last-second 3-pointer swished through the net.

Teammate Reggie Bullock scribbled the score on a scrap of paper, ripped it up and threw it away in a symbolic effort to move on.

No matter how each player handled the aftermath, the Tar Heels know they're still in a three-way tie atop the Atlantic Coast Conference with Duke and Florida State. And they can't stew over Wednesday night's 85-84 loss any longer with No. 19 Virginia coming to the Smith Center on Saturday.

"I think once the emotions came down for everybody, we realized it's not the end of the world," Marshall said Friday. "We're going to be fine."

"It's just a matter of focusing on the next game."

Regardless of how easy Marshall makes it sound, the Tar Heels (20-4, 7-2) aren't likely to just shrug off the loss. They ran out to a 13-point lead early in the second half, appeared close to blowing the game open several times and led by 10 with 2 1/2 minutes left.

Yet Duke staged an improbable rally, ending with a shot that will be replayed for years in permanent rotation among the biggest highlights from the fierce rivalry. It was North Carolina's first home loss in nearly two years, ending a school-record 31-game home winning streak.

"The only good you can take from it is to become more determined," UNC coach Roy Williams said afterward. "You ought to be ticked off. You ought to be flat-out ticked off and that's the best language I can use. If you start wallowing in the sorrow for yourself and feeling frickin' sorry for yourself, you ought to just go home. My team better by god come back and decide they're going to be better."

"We lost a game that we could have won. If we don't learn something from that and come back and be more determined, then I've got the wrong group. And I don't think I have the wrong group."

Vandy a test for UK

By Keith Taylor
The Winchester Sun

Kentucky coach John Calipari likes a challenge. Based on past history, Calipari and the Wildcats will get one tonight against Vanderbilt in Nashville.

Calipari compared his team's ESPN "GameDay" contest against the Commodores to a "great test." The two Southeastern Conference foes split two games last year, with Vanderbilt claiming an 81-77 triumph in Music City. Calipari expects the same type of finish this time around in front of a national stage.

"Every one of these teams give us something different," Calipari said Friday. "We've never played Vandy with this team. Just like Tennessee is totally different than Vandy, who is totally different than Florida, who is totally different from Mississippi State. You have teams, for us, it is important to see how we will respond. Every experience is new for us and we're learning."

The Wildcats (24-1, 10-0) have successfully passed all of their tests during the past 16 games and own the nation's longest winning streak. Ninth-ranked Murray State's 23-game win streak came to an end following a 72-68 home loss to Tennessee State Thursday night. To prevent his team from falling into a lull, Calipari has added new wrinkles on offense and defense to keep the players focused on each task at hand.

"I like adding things, tweaking the offense and tweaking the defense because it makes them think," Calipari said. "I don't want them to walk into practice because it is monotonous in that we do the same the post with our small guys and we didn't handle it well. We got sucked into their tempo with the outside shots. That was very disappointing."

The Pioneers (19-7) connected on seven shots from long range, led by Andrew Sampson, who finished with a game-high 22 points to lead three Simon Kenton players in double figures.

"He's a streak shooter and when he gets going early, he's tough to handle," Humphreys said. "Simon Kenton is going to make a deep run in the 8th Region and I think one of the keys is going to be him. He's coming on at the right time."

The Cardinals placed three players in double digits, led by Charlie Rogers with 17 points. Rogers scored 15 of those in the second half. Bopper Stenzel followed Rogers with 16 points and Adam Fatkin had 14. Fatkin led Clark's scoring output in the opening half with 10 points.

Humphrey praised the effort by Rogers.

"He's growing up right in front of us," the Clark coach said. "He's just competing. Last year he played OK, but (when) the first adversity (came), he just shut down and you couldn't count on him. Right now, he's not into that. He's not always going to play well, but his mind is in the right spot. That's encouraging going down the stretch."

things throughout the year in some cases, so I like changing things up to just make them really focus and concentrate."

Although Kentucky has fared well on the road in the conference this season (4-0), the Wildcats have traditionally struggled at Memorial Gym. Vandy has won five of the past six games against the Wildcats in Nashville. In addition, the Commodores have defeated top-ranked teams four times in a row at home, knocking off Tennessee (2008), Florida (2007), Kentucky (1993) and North Carolina (1987) at Memorial Gym.

"I just know it's a tough place to play," Kentucky senior Darius Miller said. "Their fans do a great job of getting them hyped up to play and they feed off of that. We have to come out from the beginning and try to get the fans out of the game."

Miller has been preparing the team's freshman cast, including point guard Marquis Teague, on what to expect in the 60-year-old venue that features coaching benches for home and visiting teams on each end zone.

"I've heard about it plenty of times from different people and they said that it's a crazy place to play," Teague said.

Although it will be Teague's first trip to Memorial Gym, he's not concerned about the team's lack of experience in a unique setting.

"I feel like we have great experience," he said. "We've played North Carolina, Louisville, some great teams and had some close games and we've played on the road. So I feel like we have good experience. Being a freshman that doesn't play a factor anymore, we're just playing basketball."

Opening lead — king of hearts.

Assume you're West, defending against three notrump. You start by leading the K-Q-10 of hearts, declarer winning the third round with the ace. Your partner played high-low to the first two tricks and followed to the third, so apparently he also started with four hearts.

South now leads the A-Q of clubs, and you properly take the queen with the king. This is because there's no holding possible with which you could gain by ducking the queen, but there are several holdings. South could have where you could lose by ducking.

East's jack falls on your king, indicating that declarer has the ten. It is at this point that you should be very careful about what you do next. For example, if you cash your nine of hearts, South will discard his ten of clubs and easily score nine tricks.

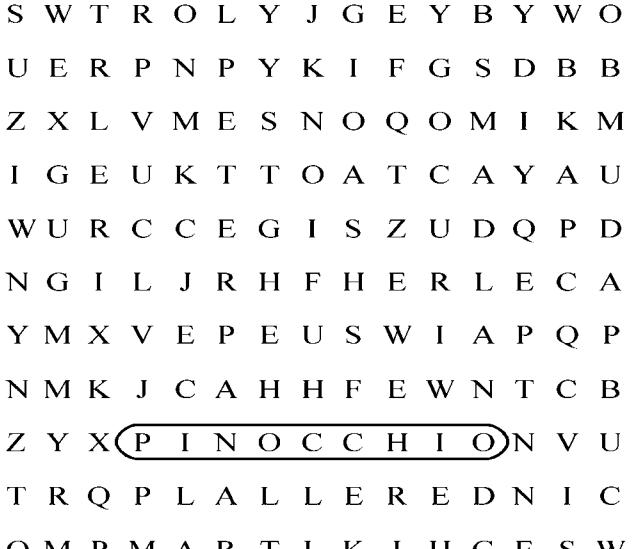

But resisting the impulse to cash the heart nine at this juncture is not good enough. Given declarer's opening two-notrump bid and what you can see in your own hand and dummy, it is a virtual certainty that if South is allowed to score four club tricks, he is sure to make the contract.

Accordingly, in an attempt to cut him off from dummy, you should shift to the king of diamonds! If you make this play, South goes down one; if you don't, South makes the contract.

While the king of diamonds is admittedly an unusual play, this doesn't mean that it is impossible to find. On the contrary, you have all the information needed to justify it. It is true that declarer might have a hand where he can make the contract no matter what you do. But it is also true that the king of diamonds is the only play that gives you a chance to defeat the contract when it can be defeated.

Deer season ends with fourth-largest harvest

By Art Lander Jr.
KDFWR

FRANKFORT — Kentucky's white-tailed deer season ended Jan. 16 with hunters posting the fourth largest overall harvest ever recorded.

"The 119,656 deer taken was the highest total since the 2008-2009 season," said Tina Brunjes, deer program coordinator for the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. "Good hunting weather may have been a contributing factor to the excellent harvest during the last two months of the season."

Hunters bagged a record harvest of 12,989 in December, which surpassed the previous record by 4,261 set in December 2004. "Muzzle-loader hunters were responsible for that big jump, checking in 10,536 deer during their nine-day late season that ran Dec. 10-18," said Brunjes.

January's harvest was excellent, too with hunters telechecking 2,628 deer — just 73 short of last year's record harvest for the month.

Overall, hunters reported taking 55 percent male deer and 45 percent female deer. Modern firearms hunters bagged 83,357 deer, muzzleloader hunters 15,161 deer and archers 18,169 deer.

"For the last 10 years our harvest has gone up and down a bit, but overall the trend is stable," said Brunjes. "That's a good sign."

This past season, Kentucky had 90,247 successful deer hunters, but 77 percent (69,776 hunters) took just one deer. "Seventeen percent of our successful deer hunters (15,118 hunters) took two deer, and six percent of our successful deer hunters (5,353 hunters) took three or more deer," said Brunjes.

By zone, hunters harvested 52,664 deer in the 35 Zone 1 counties; 30,160 deer in the 27 Zone 2 counties; 25,324 deer in the 33 Zone 3 counties and 11,505 in the 25 Zone 4 counties.

The bulk of Kentucky counties are in deer management Zones 2 and 3. Brunjes said there's still work to be done in the Zone 1 counties, where deer densities are too high, and in the Zone 4 counties, where deer densities are below target levels.

Archers and muzzleloader hunters took 61 percent antlerless deer. Modern gun hunters bagged the lowest percent of antlerless deer 38 percent.

Crossbow hunters posted the highest percent of antlerless deer in the harvest, 63 percent. They also established a new harvest record in the process. Crossbow hunters bagged 1,969 deer, which represents about 1.6 percent of the overall harvest.

For the third consecutive season, archers posted a harvest record by taking 18,169 deer, about 15 percent of the total harvest.

"Overall, the hunters we have are being more successful," said Brunjes. "We hope that all this success will help them in mentoring new hunters."
